An invitation to a shared inquiry

What might our dreams reveal about the world we share? Bring night dreams and the associations they evoke—images, memories, feelings and bodily sensations—to a shared inquiry into El Niño and our changing climate.

Our primary task

To share dreams and associations, make connections, and allow new thoughts to emerge about our collective experience of living with El Niño and a changing climate.

A space for shared inquiry

Our attention is on the dreams and the connections between them, rather than interpreting the private life of the dreamer. Each encounter includes a matrix followed by a reflective review. You do not need to bring a dream about El Niño.

El Niño is a natural warming of the equatorial Pacific that changes rainfall and temperatures across regions. It unfolds within a climate warming through human activity, which can intensify some extremes.
